Hungary

Buildings in the age of departure

From 26 March until 2 May 2014

- Subject: The latest exhibition in the Architektur im Ringturm series continues the examination of totalitarian regimes with a look at architecture during Hungary's socialist realist era. Focusing on a selection of around 30 buildings constructed between 1945 and 1960, the exhibition shows how architects managed to sidestep political guidelines and official dictates on socialist realism, and incorporate elements of modernism into their designs. The show takes an international perspective, comparing location-specific and universal aspects in an attempt to highlight the qualities that define the various local nuances of Hungarian modernism.
