Hungary – Architecture in the Long 1960s

From 6 April to 26 May 2017

- Theme: In the latest instalment of the Architektur im Ringturm exhibition series, Wiener Städtische Versicherungsverein once again focuses on Hungary's architectural diversity. The upcoming exhibition turns the spotlight on the Hungarian architectural scene during the period often referred to as "the long 1960s". In terms of its theme and chronology, the show ties in with the "Hungary: Architecture in the era of awakening" exhibition staged at the Ringturm in 2014. Architecturally speaking, the long 1960s were a highly productive period, in spite of the Hungarian state's consolidation of power following the 1956 uprising. A number of high-quality designs were realised that reflected the pervading modernist spirit. The exhibition presents some outstanding examples, with selected photos and historical documents providing vivid impressions of what was a significant period in post-war construction.
